

Life Skills You Learn From School

Why do schools teach a child which we ignore many times?

My earlier belief and perception were

1. Education is a stamp or certification needed to get a job
2. We hardly use what we learn in school life.
3. I have no memories of what I learnt in school or college

However, after spending more than a decade in education here are three things that I feel were the base of my perception

1. It was more of rote learning and no logical development that took place in my school days
2. Education was the download of information, not the practical use or implementation of it.
3. It was like finishing of work or task not exploring new things

So, what does school education teach for life

1. It teaches habit & discipline in life.
2. It teaches social skills, like maintaining, handling and building relationships
3. It lays the foundation for life for almost all spheres
4. It provides opportunities to explore various fields

One thing that I feel every educator should do?

Make subject learning or teaching so interesting, that a child falls in love with the subject. Mostly it is the teacher who is the sole person responsible for anyone to like or dislikes a subject.
