Growth Drivers

- The increasing elderly population is expected to drive market growth.

The escalating burden of the aging demographic has led to a global surge in the demand for dentures. As the elderly population continues to grow, there is an expected increase in the need for addressing acute and chronic oral health conditions, subsequently driving greater demand for artificial teeth. Moreover, the rising prevalence of periodontal diseases among adults is poised to bolster full dentures market expansion further. As an illustration, the World Health Organization (WHO) reports that severe periodontal diseases affect approximately 19% of the global adult population, translating to over 1 billion cases worldwide. Consequently, these factors are expected to drive market growth.
