To discover, we have to compare offline poker to playing poker online.

Why? Well, we know that people do make consistent incomes using only offline poker, so it makes sense that individuals ought to be in a position to win internet poker at the same rate, as long as the 2 games aren't too different.

Is Playing Internet poker Different To Offline Poker?

Firstly, in offline poker games you are able to read tells and appear individuals the face when they play. No chance in online poker, you can't simply read players nervous reactions or any tells they may have, instead you must rely on the choices they make.

However, you can still read people by previous plays they've made and obvious betting patterns they have. Without having a texas holdem face, or you have difficulty in reading people, this could actually be an advantage.

Secondly, there are almost three times as many hands dealt per hour in the online world of poker. It doesn't change the game too much tactic wise, aside from the rate at which the game is played. Generally, individuals who make earnings with poker with their computer, stand to make more money compared to what they can within an offline game.

Thirdly, in internet poker you should use many tools while you play the game that will let you know the odds you have of winning your hand. These power tools are merely impossible to use within an offline game of poker. Not many offline games would allow you to have a laptop at your disposal when you are sitting at the table.

Finally, you will find poker tournaments and funds games available on the web that might be impossible in the real world. Things like micro cash games (games which use ridiculously small blinds) or huge tournaments will be a nightmare to organize in real life.

Can You Make A Living Playing Internet poker?

It is certainly possible for people to play and win enough poker on the web to it a full time income - this is true - yet it's a different sort of person who would succeed in the internet.

Skills which include an in-depth knowledge of the game, and the ability to read a lot of people are not necessary in poker online. Instead, different skills are needed to achieve success. When compared with offline poker, another personality type is needed in order to make a full time income playing poker online.
