Key Points:

- TRBO is sitting in an RSI trough under 30, pointing to a massively oversold stock that could be overdue for a major bounce.
- TRBO recently announced that monthly revenues will begin hitting the books starting this week (December 1, 2017), which could massively boost sales growth numbers.
- TRBO has gobbled up a number of companies in just the past couple months, moving into the cannabis space, as well as other segments.
- TRBO is starting to see all the underpinnings of major top-line growth just as all the speculative money has already been washed out.
- TRBO has a history of big moves, and has possible technical targets 150% and 900% above.

TRBO (Turbo Global Partners Inc.) is a marketing consulting services company that partners with companies anywhere in the world to help them better generate long-term, renewable, predictable, cash flow. TURBO has acquired a number of companies that operate as wholly-owned subsidiaries; entered multi-year joint venture revenue share agreements; and has invested in varying equity stakes in a number of companies.

Think of it as something like a Berkshire Hathaway (Warren Buffett's company): TRBO takes on an operational role to streamline and cultivate the best version of a newly acquired entity, which can unleash big things over time.

The setup here is simple: As you can see from the chart, the stock is about as oversold as anything we have ever seen. It may be massively overdue for a relief bounce right now. And in fact, the company just announced something that could act as just exactly the type of catalyst to set a move like that in motion: The company's announcement last week that Turbo Retail Management, Inc., holder of the Wal-Mart Master Lease for the GP

Brands, Inc. (GP) postal, pack and ship franchise stores within Florida Wal-Mart Supercenters, commences receiving predictable recurring monthly lease revenue December 1, 2017.

The announcement hit last week, but if you think about it, those revenues are set to hit on Thursday (December 1).

We did the math on this: Given the company's current TTM rev stream, that represents an annualized potential jump of about 360% in sales growth that could be reported over the near term. We think the market maybe hasn't done this math quite yet. But the sales are about to hit, and the company may well announce it again more plainly. Between now and then, it could potentially be Monster Bounce time.

Before that, management also revealed the company's recent acquisition Indica Islands Company (INDICA), growers-producers and processors of Medical Marijuana, Cannabinoid products, and Hemp-infused Vodka.

Marijuana-related business is expected to be perhaps the fastest growing segment of the economy over the next five years according to several reports, including Cannacord's recent work. The space is heading for over 20Bil in sales by 2020.

So, there's a ton going on here right now. And in a chart this desperately overdue for a bounce, we have to start to look at the potential targets. The typical way to deal with this type of pattern is to use

- 1. last consolidation highs and*
- 2. next major moving average.*

That's the inside and outside target set.

By that standard, the last consolidation high was at .025 (150% higher) and the first major Moving Average is the 50-day at about .10 (about 900% higher).

In other words, if this thing gets some traction and starts to run, you have to have it on you radar!
