On this week's Episode title "Make Your Own Kind of Music", Dexter investigates a murder that hits close to home. Meanwhile, Dr. Vogel gets the surprise of her life when someone from her past returns.

Orphaned at the age of three by the murder of his mother, Dexter Morgan is adopted by Miami police officer Harry Morgan and his wife Doris. After discovering young Dexter had been killing neighborhood pets for years, Harry tells Dexter that he believes the need to kill "got into" him too early, and that Dexter's need to kill will only grow. To keep Dexter from killing innocent people, Harry teaches him The Code: (1)Dexter's victims must be killers themselves who have killed without justifiable cause and are likely to do so again. (2)Dexter must always be sure of his target's guilt, thus he frequently goes to amazing lengths to obtain undeniable proof of his victim's guilt. (3)Most importantly, Dexter must never get caught. Flashbacks throughout the series show Harry (who died several years previously) teaching Dexter how to fake normal human emotion and social behavior and how to cover his tracks after a kill. Dexter follows The Code religiously to satisfy the "Dark Passenger" (the name assigned to his urge to kill). However, in Season 4, he hastily kills a photographer later proven innocent.

Like many serial killers, Dexter keeps a trophy of each kill: he slices his victim's cheek with a scalpel to collect a droplet of their blood, which he preserves on a blood slide. He stores his collection in a wooden box concealed within his air conditioner.
