"You know, I don't have the foggiest idea. ... The reality of the situation will become obvious eventually," Beane told WKBW-TV's Joe Buscaglia when inquired as to whether Dareus was "ready" with the arrangement in Buffalo. "It was frustrating, as I said after that diversion. He was remorseful yesterday and said the correct things. Activities talk louder than words and the reality of the situation will become obvious eventually. ... We comprehend what sort of player he can be. We want to see that on film."

Don't imagine it any other way: The Bills are in transition. What Beane and McDermott acquired is not what they intend to construct. The profound cutting program adjustments are a long way from being done in Buffalo.

Ezekiel Elliott's suspension request hearing has finished up following three days and over 25 hours of gatherings, NFL Network Insider Ian Rapoport announced Thursday.

The interest, which started Tuesday, was heard by mediator Harold Henderson, who will now choose whether to lessen or maintain the class' underlying decision.
