Breaking Bad Season 5 Episode 13 use his knowledge to cook methamphetamine with one of his former students, deadbeat Jesse Pinkman. He immediately clashes with Albuquerque's local drug dealers and the season culminates with Walter Breaking Bad Season 5 Episode 13 adopting his drug kingpin persona for the first time: Heisenberg. As the show begins, Walter White is a high-school chemistry teacher who receives a dire diagnosis: inoperable lung cancer. To provide for his family's wife Skyler and disabled son Walter Jr. Walter decides. Season 2 finds the dynamic duo facing setback after setback, especially in their distribution. They meet shady lawyer Saul Goodman, who provides smart but less-than-legal business advice. As Jesse becomes more and more drug-addled, Walt meets a local fast-food business owner, Gustavo Fring, who offers $1.2 million for 38 pounds of meth. Walt withholds Jesse's half of the profit and even does nothing as Jesse's manipulative girlfriend overdoses and dies in front of him. On the home front, Skyler kicks Walter out, fed up with his secrets. Walter confesses his whole criminal side to Skyler in Season 3, and she demands a divorce. Meanwhile, Gustavo Fring moves Walt into a state-of-the-art, underground meth lab and provides a new assistant, Gale. Walter's brother-in-law, DEA agent Hank, begins to put a case together against Jesse. Jesse meanwhile learns that Gus's henchmen made the kid brother of Jesse's new girlfriend kill one of Jesse's distributors, and conspires to kill the henchmen in retribution. When Gus replaces Walt with apprentice Gale, Walt makes Jesse kill Gale to make them indispensable. Season 4 sees Gus reluctantly rehiring Walter and Jesse. Meanwhile, Skyler agrees to launder Walt's profits with a car wash the family buys. Hank closes in, directing his investigation toward Gus now. Upon discovering Walter's connection with Hanks, Gus fires Walter and threatens harm to both him and his family, but Walter outsmarts Gus and kills him by convincing a dying man to be a suicide bomber. In the first half of Season 5, Walter and Jesse are working for themselves again. Skyler feigns a suicide attempt only to get her children to the relative safety of Hank's house. Walt has ten men who know his secret murdered in prison. He also kills Mike Ehrmantraut, a longtime ally of his and Jesse's. The first chapter of the season ends with Hank discovering a book with an inscription from Gale to Walt, finally piecing together that Walt is the notorious drug lord he's been chasing. The second half of Season five premiered August 11, picking up right where things left off, with the episode reaching a tense peak when Hank confronts Walt about his identity as Heisenberg. It also features another fast-forward intro where the Walter sees what has become of the Whites' Albuquerque home. But what about the rest of Walter's family? There are some pretty out-there fan theories... but Episode 9 didn't give any real indication outside of that intro tease. Breaking Bad is hurtling toward its finale at a breakneck pace — each episode of the second half of Season 2 packed with wrenching tensions and only four installments remaining before it all ends on September 29. Now we have one cryptic clue about the show's final moments, which comes in the form of six letters: "Felina" This series finale already has piqued our curiosity! But what does it all mean? UPROXX has rounded up some of Breaking Bad fans' best observations about the title. For example: It could be no more complicated than a simple anagram: "Felina" can be rearranged to spell "finale." According to Wikipedia, Felina is the name of a professional wrestler, a DC Comics character, a princess's pet in the world of The Wizard of Oz, a professor in the Pokemon universe, a reggaeton singer, and a Filipino TV drama. It's also the feminine version of the Spanish word for "feline." But, in perhaps the coolest theory, one fan on Reddit has pointed out that "Fe" is the chemical symbol for iron, which essential for blood; "Li" stands for lithium, which is used in meth-cooking, and "Na" is sodium, which is found in tears. So "Felina" could refer to "blood, meth, and tears," a bastardization of the idiom "blood, sweat, and tears."
