Stocks versus options

To be able to raise funds in future, a trader needs to keep yourself informed of the major differences between stocks and trading stock options. With stocks, time is proportional to growth, as stocks of well-known companies tend to rise over a lengthier amount of time. However, in case there is options, time is disproportional, as as time passes, the value of the price premium declines. Though time is the main aspect in trading stock options, the closer the choices are to expiration, traders are well advised to purchase more time before expiration than needed. This practice helps buyers avoid painful time decay, which especially occurs in the ultimate month right before expiration. options trading strategies pdf
