Axolotl habitat

Axolotls are amphibians from Mexico, they are native to Lake Xochimilco near Mexico City, They are also called “hexagonal dinosaurs”. Wild axolotls are endangered, estimated at around 500 to 1000, The axolotl animal had been listed on the International Union for Conservation of Nature’s annual Red List of threatened species. The existing axolotl animal is almost grown by artificial breeding.

The adult axolotl typically measures 23-30 cm in length, with a wide head and three symmetrical external gill stalks on each side. These stalks are used for respiration in oxygenated water. The axolotl has invisible residual teeth and feeds primarily via suction.

Axolotl Regeneration

The axolotls have the ability to regenerate limbs, gills, and parts of their brains and eyes. They can restore the broken organs to fully function, and also accept transplants from other individuals. These properties are the perfect model for research organs and stem cell regeneration.

Neoteny

The axolotls delay development when they live in the terrain of hills and lakes with inadequate food. The adult axolotls still keep their gills in water and can't breathe through their lungs. This is a survival mechanism in all salamander families. The axolotls are still alive in the form of a lower larval stage, they require less food than the big adult.

Artificial breeding of the axolotls

Breeding axolotls in captivity is easy, It is said that lower temperature leads to slow metabolism, and that reduces the risk of disease and death. The temperature for axolotls is between 16 °C (61 °F) to 18 °C (64 °F), They can be fed small strips of meat or fish pellets, as well as frozen or live bloodworms, small fishes, earthworms, and waxworms.

You need to control the water flow and set up separate spaces for each axolotl in the tank. Axolotls are solitary creatures, they will quickly grow within 6 months, They'll bite other axolotls that get into their territory.

Captive axolotls may live as long as 15 years. The axolotl is not a threat to humans because it lacks the dental power to cause any damage. You should tear the worms and fish that you feed it into small pieces, and avoid giving it large pieces of food that it could choke on.
