

Are You Aware of the TX Real Estate Licensing Requirements?

Do you want to be a real estate salesperson or a real estate broker? First of all, ask yourself if you have already applied for your license. How do you get a real estate license? Pursuant to legislation by the state of Texas, the Texas Real Estate Commission is tasked to monitor the activities of real estate workers, such as brokers, inspectors, and salespersons, and to ensure that licenses are duly given to individuals who have completed the prerequisites.

Here is a brief overview of the requirements for real estate licensing: for real estate salesperson licenses, you need to have completed 210 hours of approved courses by the TREC. These courses you may complete through online studying from CELI at celi-edu.com. What are these courses, specifically? According to TREC, you must have shown proof that you have finished, the Principles of Real Estate, Law of Agency, and Law of Contracts, to name a few. There are additional courses you may take to complete another semester of 60 hours, and the TREC site lists them down for you to browse.

You can find out more on real estate license courses by checking the Texas Real Estate Commission site, or you can also check out the site for Continuing Education for Licensing, Inc. at celi-edu.com. Remember, real estate laws in the state of Texas prohibit anyone from practicing in the real estate industry without the duly issued license.
