

Should You Let Go of Your own Old Fashion Shoes?

I've a wardrobe full of style shoes. When I say manner shoes, I mean which at some point in my life these were in fashion. As you are knowledgeable, fashion styles alter with time. Despite this reality, I'm one of those ladies that hang on to each and every footwear I have because I grow emotionally attached to every pair. How can I let it go when I love these people so much?

I pointed out that this is a genetic deficiency that I have. My mother has dedicated your entire half of her walk-in wardrobe to her manner shoes. She does not get rid of the shoes, especially if they are still in a good condition. She will just get rid of them when they are harmed or broken. This does not happen very often. I realize I shouldn't undertake it. I shouldn't blame my shoe passion on my mom. But exactly how else can I explain it? OK, maybe I just love our fashion shoes a bit too much.

There are a match platform shoes that I bought way back in 2000. These were my favourite couple of going-out shoes. They were secure and looked wonderful on my feet. We wore them with the season when they have been in fashion but during that decade the platform shoe was no longer in fashion. It was a pattern that just ended. I used to be so disappointed because I loved that trend shoe. I couldn't bring myself to chuck the ball shoes away or even give them away. Guess what... the platform shoe has made any come-back. I went back in order to my wardrobe and discovered my favourite pair of system heels, cleaned all of them up a bit as well as enjoyed a night out using them. Everyone told me how much they loved my own new fashion shoes. I blushed and accepted the compliment. I became on cloud eight.

I think that the technique of saying goodbye on your fashion shoes is actually subjective. Unless your own shoes are badly broken beyond repair then there's no reason to get rid of these people. Okay, there is the exemption when a fad hits the fashion world. There's a difference between a gimmick and a trend. A new trend lasts more time and may come back within a few years whereas a fad is just a one time of year hit. A fad is something outrageous that appears like a good idea however it has no longevity. Purchase trendy ladies sneakers that will last you over one season.
