While my Immigration lawyer friend was still dating his wife, he was worried about many things like impressing her, not making a fool of himself, etc. One thing he wasn't worried about was the prices of the Spouse Visa UK or the tedious spouse visa application rules.

However, after a dramatic movie-like romance, they got married, pregnant, and decided to maneuver to the United Kingdom, to make sure that their child could have the life and therefore the future my friend always dream of.

He tells me that having spent numerous years asking his clients to prevent crying in his office, he was now within the ir exact situation: crying in the plan to inform his newly married wife why the United Kingdom Spouse Visa was causing such an enormous roadblock to their family plans.

In the next several days, he honed his application with a fine-tooth comb and reached several lessons. the primary and most vital lesson he says he would describe to any future applicant is as follows:

UK Spouse visas are sinfully expensive

The UK spouse visa fee is £3,395, including the £1,872 immigration health surcharge. additionally, the waiting times include anything from a couple of too many months for entry clearance applications. If you would like to buy the appliance to be expedited, it'll cost you another £590, approx.

The total cost of the visa (a period of two and a half years) was £3,985. there'll be similar levels of costs when leave granted is nearing to finish and therefore the application will need to be extended, or if the applicant chooses to eventually choose a settlement.

This cost figure doesn't include legal fees (for the people that aren't immigration lawyers like my friend) or the several flights required to still live alongside your spouse while keeping a tab on the immigration rules of two different countries.

Conclusion: take care about where you spend your legal fees.

Like my friend painfully learned, it costs tons of cash to urge through a spouse visa application successfully.
