

What Is a Data Centre?

The data center is made up of a network of computing and storage resources. These resources share various applications and hardware to deliver the packages.

At the most basic level, a data center is a physical location where companies store their mission-critical software and data. The data center is made up of a network of computing and storage resources. These resources share various applications and hardware to deliver the packages.

